Through the streets of Springfield would be an extraordinary sight, yet it might not cause any more excitement than

A HEADLESS MAN,

A DRY GOODS PALACE.

AN ARMY OF EMPLOYEES GETTING READY TO CLOSE UP.

The Bang of the Gong at 6 o'clock in the Evening—Cash Girls in Marching Array—A Startling Sight—Night Work. Rigid Discipline.

Bang went a gong at 6 o'clock in the evening in a palatial dry goods emporium on Sixth avenue. Instantly 1,300 employees stopped work.

"What means this commotion?" asked a reporter of the manager.

"That bell notifies our army that they are to get ready to close up," was the reply. "In a moment you will hear the gong strike twice. That means to cover up the shelves and counters. Three bells will ring after that, and all those who are not waiting on customers in the dress goods department will go home. Four bells sends down the attendants on the upper floor and five bells empties the house of all but the cash girls. Wait until they form in line. It is a sight."

The reporter waited until the gong rang six times. Instantly the ties of rigid and necessary discipline were cut, and the little ones formed in squads. Such a cyclone of voices and rushing feet as ensued. It reminded the observer of a college cane rush.

"These girls are as hard to control as a regiment of boys," said the good natured manager. "It seems incredible that in their duty to obtain desirable places in the line they can be so rough. We dislike doing it, but we are sometimes obliged to discharge a few of them for their rough conduct. These girls are all over the age of 14 years, and they must be furnished with a certificate from a school teacher before we employ them."

At a given signal one squad marched past the other. There were no careless faces in the ranks. They all went past smiling, winking or shyly making faces at the other squad.

"Oh, they went out first last night," cried a little one in the company left behind. "I don't think that's fair."

But was fair; for the first outgoing squad at evening was the first to arrive in the morning. Equal division of labor is the motto of the firm, and the Biblical quotation of "the last shall be first" is not carried out.

A STARTLING SIGHT.

Twenty minutes after the first bell rang the long aisles were in darkness, with the exception of here and there a dim light at each end of the room. The superintendent and the journalist inspected the premises. In going through the suit department a startling sight met the reporter's eyes. A row of graceful forms dressed in costumes worth hundreds of dollars were there before the store closed; but on the return trip they had been disrobed and nothing remained of their former splendor but paper bustles. A wire form wearing a paper bustle in a dimly lighted room produces a ghastly effect, and Mr. Thorne said "he was not surprised at the visitor's timidity."

The sound of female voices was heard singing a plaintive negro melody.

"That comes from the work room on the top floor," said the guide. "We sometimes keep the dressmakers at work until midnight altering cloaks and dresses bought during the day. Of course we pay them liberally for all extra work."

The basement of a dry goods store at night is a busy place. In the delivery department clerks were busy as bees checking off the packages and depositing them in the boxes of the drivers, who stuffed their wagons with them until the sides bulged out.

"These are the cloak rooms," said the superintendent, pointing to a long row of stalls with a square opening in each door.

Here the clerks deposit their hats, cloaks and lunch boxes, and receive a check for them. One of the reasons for sending the employees home in squads is to avoid confusion here.

"This is our head night watchman," said the superintendent. "He is a good man to keep away from the store after dark. He is a walking arsenal and makes it very uncomfortable for those who try to make his acquaintance at night." He has a large force under him and they are all well armed. Their duties are to close the premises and protect it until daylight. They sweep out the stores and dust every nook and corner in the building. A squad of paint cleaners follow the sweepers. They clean the stools and counters thoroughly. The most delicate colored fabric would not be injured by coming in contact with the woodwork after they get through with it. All night long the men worked steadily, stopping at midnight for supper and an hour's well earned rest. The watchmen on the outside of the building were relieved and went inside for a smoky hot supper supplied them by the liberal proprietor.

Just as daylight came tumbling through the eastern windows, the great iron shutters were raised and the noise sounded like the changing of anchor chains on a man-of-war. The back windows were opened and the dust blown out. The advance guard of clerks began to arrive. The white robes of the counters were removed and folded up and the hushful wire forms were once more arrayed in presentable attire. Customers began to drift in. The long night had passed and a new day's business had begun.—New York Evening Sun.

Surgery in the Hospitals.

One of our doctors writes to me: "While writing about experimental surgery in the hospitals you might have added that cases of death under the knife and that they never get into print. There is not a hospital in this city that would allow a newspaper to send a reporter to attend the operations in its products for a month and give him free access to all the particulars of them. Within that time there would certainly be cases to record which it would not be pleasant for the hospital to have recorded. The secrets of our hospitals are harder to get at than those of Blackwell's Island. Some day some newspaper will catch a genuine sensation by revealing them."—Tribune in New York News.

Washington's Bedchamber.

The interest of the whole house centers in the room where Washington died. "The general's room," the room I liked best in the house," as the servant called it, in a tone of genuine and reverent affection. Just where the great man lay a-dying eighty-eight years ago, the bed now stands, and beside it the light stand on which are the rings left by his medicine glasses, unchanged since that day. The secretary at which he wrote, the hair covered trunk in which he carried his possessions, the surveyor's tripod he had used, the clock he threw about his shoulders when he went over the farm, the leather chair in which he sat, the covering cut away by vandal hands, are all there. There was something, in spite of these few discordant notes, that seemed peculiar to that room. I could not feel that thousands of eyes had looked upon it with idle curiosity, but as though it had been kept sacred all these years and was yet redolent of the memories which have set it apart forever.

"Many wonders," said our guide, "why Mrs. Washington lived up in the attic, and not in the general's room. It was customary in the family to shut up a room for two years after a death had happened in it, and this room was shut up. Mrs. Washington went up in the attic and there she died. She never had no fire in the winter, and in the summer it was very hot, but she staid with only her cat for company."

The corner cut off from the lower part of the door he showed us was for the easy egress and ingress of this familiar friend. The attic room is pretty and attractive looking, but has in it now only one piece of furniture used by Mrs. Washington—the three cornered washstand.—The Century.

The Climate of California.

However great the advantages of California may be for those residing on the Pacific coast, the climate of the State is not in the Missouri river should seriously consider whether the inducements are great enough to compensate for the disadvantages. To one in health the ride to San Francisco is less than one might properly expect, but for invalids it is a serious matter to be confined to a car for five or six consecutive days, subject all the time to the unavoidable inhalation of the various particles of matter inseparable from railroad riding, and to the impossibility of securing reliable good ventilation, uniform temperature, or freedom from draughts, closeness and frequent changes. When you add the return journey, the advantages ought to be very greatly reduced. Are they sufficient?

In summer the climate of California is hot and dry away from San Francisco and other very windy and variable locations. In winter it is very rainy and damp, as the great rainfall between October and March, which is there, the season of verdure, for those who are simply delicate, or inherit a tendency to consumption, I know of no country where I should regard the chances better for fair health and a prolongation of life than a residence in southern California, but for such as have a developed pulmonary trouble I would advise careful consideration, unless they decide to go there to make it a home, to stay while they live.—William Smith Brown in Harper's Magazine.

Showed How It Was Done.

A jolly party was sitting around a table at a restaurant at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, talking about the numerous thefts of fall overcoats which had lately been reported from every part of the city. They all agreed that such a thing could not possibly happen to any one of them, as they had their eyes wide open. "Nevertheless," interposed a gentleman sitting at the next table, "I would, if it need be, undertake to prove that any one of your coats could easily be abstracted from under your very noses." They were astonished, but he explained that it was only necessary to engage a man in an interesting conversation and while he continued under the influence to arise, take his overcoat, put it on, light a cigar and leave the room with a gracious bow. The entire company kept up a continuous roar of laughter at the amusing tale and the still more entertaining practical illustration with which the relater accompanied his words and walked out of the door. He did not come back, neither did the overcoats with a pocketbook with $100 in it.—Chicago Herald.
